OUR LECTURERS

Neil Taylor, Richard Bloomfield, Andy Deere & Michelle Mills

Neil is the founder and Managing Director of NTI who is constantly wondering what the acronym stands for.

He has been training at the cutting edge of the restructuring and insolvency profession for more than 30 years and has even more energy and passion for the next 30. He is a senior consultant of the World Bank and joins with them in designing and implementing insolvency licencing regimes and qualifications around the globe.

Richard has been with NTI since the beginning of time (a fact that belies his annoyingly youthful good looks). He is a director of the company and lends his IP credentials to our brand.

He is simply the best lecturer around and adds wisdom and limitless practical insight to his training. Richard heads up NTI's CPD department, always thinking of and implementing better ideas for new, innovative products. He is the best combination of practitioner and trainer, being a technical guru. There is none finer

Andy is an IP, a lecturer and manager of the NTIQ section of NTI's business. This is the perfect combination for a training and services company that succeeds in delivering courses and technical support to everyone in our glorious profession.

Andy is an extremely good lecturer, a zealous manager but, most importantly for us and our clients, a very good and affable person. His success in the lecture room is only matched by his energy outside of it.

NTI stole Michelle from under the wings of angels and she adds something fresh and new to the company. She is an IP, of course, but is the kind of technician who is able to communicate her message with clarity and a sharp observation.

She lectures on all courses, offers compliance and technical assistance to both students and clients and is the woman every business needs. Her perception and insolvency experience is without equal ...and she is terrific fun!
